For many business managers, one of the most pressing questions is about developing and implementing an effective leadership style, and how to build their team to achieve a high-growth, long-term, globally sustainable company.

The workshop will assist entrepreneurs, business managers and their top executives to better design their organisations, to sharpen their leadership skills and style, and form and mature their management teams to operate effectively within the global competition. Experienced entrepreneur and MIT Entrepreneurship Center's Ken Morse along with former Human Capital Partner at Atlas Ventures, Laura Barker Morse will address these questions and will provide workshop participants with a number of critical concepts and competencies that will be useful to them in both the short and long term.

The workshops are always flexible and relevant to the businesses participating on them and whether your company has 1 or 100 employees, if you are ambitious and keen to grow your business and skills, you are sure to benefit from attending this course.

More information on the workshop is in the course brochure and can be found at <http://www.entrepreneurship-scotland.com/>.

Registration for the workshop is also via the website and the deadline for application is Friday 5th February 2010.
